On 1983 it was made into a public limited company. Its manufacturing units are situated in Ishurdi, Pabna having a total 20160 installed spindles and 800 rotor heads.

When Bangladesh gained its independence from Pakistan in 1971, the new government nationalized the textile industry, as it did with many other businesses in which West Pakistanis had been the principal owners. Although there were some Bangladeshi industrialists, they did not form a large or politically powerful group and thus had to surrender control of their factories to the government as well. All of the country's textile factories were then nationalized and organized under the Bangladesh Textile Mills Corporation, or BTMC. Alhaj Textile Mills was also nationalized at that time.
